The Copyright Transfer Notice is a part of the license agreement between the sender and the recipient, and is made voluntarily. It is not a contract between the user and a third party. Starting a transfer Notification of a transfer is generated by the recipient and sent to the sender. When the notification arrives at the recipient's download manager, the data of the request is saved into the application database. The application retrieves the receipt from the database, generates the notification and sends it to the application data folder. The application then closes. The notification contains the source and the destination folder, the link format, the size of the transfer, and other information. The transfer format is a profile of the website where the transfer can be found. The notification is stored in a file called [file name of the received notification].txt in the application data folder. The notification generated by the application must be sent only by the downloader. It may not be sent to anyone else, or shared with others. Other than the first time a transfer is performed, the application only displays the file received notification and does not display any other information. However, it displays information in other windows. The notification can also be generated by a third-party tool for Windows, OS X, and other systems. Example of a notification generated by a third-party tool: Making available a single file During the transfer between the application and the user, the complete file is transmitted to the user as a file. When the file reaches the user, the user can directly access the file. The file cannot be transferred only to a partial destination. If the user's download manager cannot save the file, then the file cannot be accessed. In applications that do not have the problem, the location is automatically provided by the system to the application and the operation is simple. The application does not receive any request for the transfer of a partial file. Example: Like a standard Windows.html file or.pdf file, this type of file can be stored in any location on the user's computer and can be accessed by any program. If the file is stored in the application data folder, then it can be directly accessed by the application. The application checks the type of the file. If the file is a standard Windows.html file or.pdf file, then it attempts to access the file using Windows Explorer. If the file is not a
